ABOUT IRIS

The Institute for Regional and International Studies (IRIS) based in Sofia, Bulgaria, is an independent, non-partisan and non-profit think tank. The Institute seeks to promote the values of democracy, civil society, freedom and respect of law, assist the process of Bulgarian integration in NATO and the EU and provide public policy analyses on current domestic and international issues. IRIS is dedicated to developing regional strategies for democratic policy making in Southeast Europe and increasing international understanding of emerging Balkan issues. IRIS represents a strategic combination of advocacy-oriented and education-oriented think tank.

The mission of the Institute is to establish a link between academia and policy making and to stimulate democratic development by generating policy analyses and recommendations for regional cooperation, security, interethnic relations, conflict management and resolution, economics and foreign policy. IRIS has established successful partnerships with policy institutes throughout the region. Some of the key activities undertaken by the IRIS are focused on fostering dialogue and cooperation by conducting international conferences and roundtables. IRIS International Program develops strategic analyses and public policy recommendations in international relations, Bulgarian foreign policy, regional development, security and cooperation in Southeastern Europe. The International Program also actively contributes to the “track two” diplomacy initiatives regarding international non-governmental collaboration
